Debt: The First 5,000 Years redeems the social sciences. Not As a sociologist, I've been despairing of late at the paucity of imagination and theoretical innovation in social science research. Academics, perhaps because of the need to publish quickly and garner grant money, seem content to only add statistical validation

I recently read Debt: the First 5000 Years by David Graeber, and it has stuck on my mind for a while. It's one of those "Everybody is wrong about X, here is what you've missed in plain sight" -type books; as Chamath would put it, "often wrong, but never in doubt." It's worth summarizing here, both because I think you'll find it interesting, and

Debt: The First 5,000 Years
Here anthropologist David Graeber presents a stunning reversal of conventional wisdom: he shows that before there was money, there was debt. For more than 5,000 years, since the beginnings of the first agrarian empires, humans have used elaborate credit systems to buy and sell goods—that is, long before the invention of coins or cash.

DEBT: The First 5,000 Years – David Graeber Book Lecture

According to Anthropologist David Graeber, author of the new book 'Debt: The First 5000 Years', debt takes on an even larger significance when we trace its history, since this exercise allows us to gain a new and more complete understanding of economics as a whole, and our modern capitalist system in particular (not to mention several other aspects of the human condition to boot).

It is a political book, as Hayek openly admits, but so is Debt: the first 5000 years, except Graeber doesn't want to admit it. But don't be fooled—underneath the thin coat of science and controlled experiments, what lies is nothing but Graeber's imagination that is made to fit some of the data, without any actually scientific or really any basis.
